Forecast For Southwest England
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Friday 03 Dec 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Murky and damp this morning. Rain in the west later.

Today:
Starting damp and murky with rain, drizzle and hill fog. A few brighter spells in Gloucestershire and Wiltshire around lunchtime but further heavy rain arriving in Devon and Cornwall during the afternoon. Becoming windy in Cornwall and south Devon. Maximum temperature 12 deg C (54 deg F).

Tonight:
Rain skirting through southern counties this evening, then drier overnight before showers arrive later. Breezy in the west, especially on some coasts with temperatures staying just above freezing. Minimum temperature 3 deg C (37 deg F).

Saturday:
A mixture of sunshine and showers, these locally heavy with a risk of hail, especially in the west and near to coasts. Feeling cold in the blustery northwesterly winds. Maximum temperature 8 deg C (46 deg F).

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
Drier and sunnier on Sunday and still rather windy. Rain on Monday clearing to sunnier skies. Possibly very windy by Tuesday with further rain at times. Feeling cold.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.